

[illegible]

ABSTRACT

1 A planning system for developing new products includes resource and 2 projected financial performance information as inputs. By selecting various 3 combinations of possible new products to develop, a planner can determine a 4 product mix that maximizes future profits as well as can actually be implemented
5 using available resources. A product development schedule is generated along 6 with projected financial information.